Is London Postmodern?

The alienated modernist self is a product of the big city rather than the countryside or small town. Katherine Mullin describes how an interest in the sensibility associated with the city – often London, but for James Joyce, Dublin – developed from the mid-19th century to the modernist period.

The 10 Most Influential Artworks from the 1920s and 1930s

This book is meticulously researched with bite sized chunks of 1930s modernism showing the brilliance of London as a 1930's modern city well able to invent, innovate and embrace change. Whilst looking at buildings and architecture, the author's interest in the characters who made it all happen and who lived and work in this great city, sets this book apart from others.

(Malcolm Bradbury and James McFarlane (ed), Modernism: A Guide to European Literature 1890 - 1930) Modernism is very much a phenomenon of the city. Writers from previous generations, Dickens, Gissing and Wells, had all written about London. However, as realist writers, they created narratives driven by plot and character.
